

To guarantee resistance to extreme destructive temperatures.

To include fire-resistant materials that minimise the emission of toxic fumes and smoke.

To allow people more time to escape.

To enable the operation of emergency systems which facilitate safe and rapid evacuations.

To provide uninterrupted power supply to computers and other electronics.

